Only 21 more days remain before the opening of the trout fishing season in this district. From all indications, the streams in this area should yield good results this year. The winter has been ideal for abundant food and the lack of flood water gives assurance of a plentiful supply of rainbows. It is unfortunate that the San Francisco Flycasting Club will be unable to raise fry in their tanks this year and the sportsmen and businessmen of the district may give serious thought to a substitute plan if we are to continue this valuable means of keeping the river well stocked. The state fish and game commission have been doing a swell job and promise to plant at least as many fish as they did last year when more than four million were placed in local streams and lakes, but these fish are planted from hatcheries and not from rearing ponds. Just what difference that makes is a matter for conjecture but we are hardly prepared to experiment at this time and should we believe, provide rearing ponds.

A brief news release in another column of the Sierra Sun today reveals that people in southern California are being warned to stay away from the beaches this summer. They may form targets for the Japanese raiders, the warning says. This is an unfortunate condition but at the same time offers still another good reason for the people of this district to double their efforts to induce the vacationist to come to the mountains. In the comparative safety of the Sierra, there is no better place to relax and completely enjoy a rest. It is time we were awakening to our possibilities and offer a good, sound program of promotion. Let's not only invite vacationists here, but after they arrive see to it that they so enjoy hemselves that they will want to return and bring their friends.

After scanning the annual report of the Truckee Public Utility District, a copy of which was sent to all participants, we are more firmly convinced than ever that the district is the one organization which we cannot be without under our present form of government. The report, in a clear, concise manner, shows not alone a nice increase in business, but what is more important, the money spent on development of enterprises which Truckee cannot be without and still progress. We sincerely congratulated the directors and manager for the splendid showing during 1941.

Residents Are Warned To Avoid Beaches In Southern California

LOS ANGELES, April 9.—Residents of the Los Angeles area were told this week that unless they want to tempt Japanese air raiders they will stay away from the beaches this summer.

The warning was given by the city and county defense councils after Major General E. J. Dawley, commander of the San Pedro sub-sector told the councils it would be logical for the enemy to raid congested beaches with the resultant heavy loss of life. He said:

"I feel that it would be a logical thing for our enemy to plan a nuisance or demoralizing air attack at a time when great congestion existed at our public beaches."

Bad Check Artist Nabbed Here by Deputy Sheriff

Local Men Duped As Bay Man Passes Several Bad Checks

A man giving the name of Russ King, 49, Oakland, who had been employed for the past two weeks as a dishwasher at Soda Springs Hotel was arrested Saturday by Deputy Sheriff N. F. Dolley after he had succeeded in passing several worthless checks in Truckee.

One of the checks, Dolley said, had been forged with the name of George Stiles, manager of the Soda Springs estblishment where King was employed. This check was for $32 and was cashed at Tony's Club and Coffee Shop. After King's apprehension all but $3 of the sum obtained was returned.

While King was en route to the local jail, Johnny Ciradelli of the Capitol Cafe arrived on the scene with four $5 checks returned from the local branch of the Bank of America, which King allegedly cashed the preceeding evening.

King was taken to the county jail by Dolley Monday for further investigation and the possible filing of forgery charges.

$19,000,000 ASKED FOR FOREST FIRES

* * * * *

Englebright Testifies At Hearing

A telegram received yesterday from Congressman Harry L. Englebright lends encouragement to a request for $19,000,000 in federal funds to combat forest fires this season. The message read:

"Recently went before senate committee requested increase item of 2 million to nineteen million dollars for forest fire protection for national defense Pacific coast. Glad to tell you committee provided for nineteen million for forest fire protection."

Representative Englebright, Republican of California, testifying before the senate appropriations committee suggested that enemy planes, flying in from the northwest, might drop incendiary bombs on the forests of the Pacific states.

In this manner, he continued, there could be created a smoke screen so impenetrable that invading ground forces might land behind it without danger of being observed.

Even if no danger of that nature or of sabotage existed, it is more important than ever this year to limit outbreak of fires and to control them promptly, Englebright declared, so that they may not interfere with transporation and so that there may be minimum loss of timeber going into war productions.

Similar arguments were presented to the committee by Senator Bone Democrat of Washington, and Representative Smith, Democrat of Washington.

San Francisco Men Held In Truckee As Dodgers Of Draft

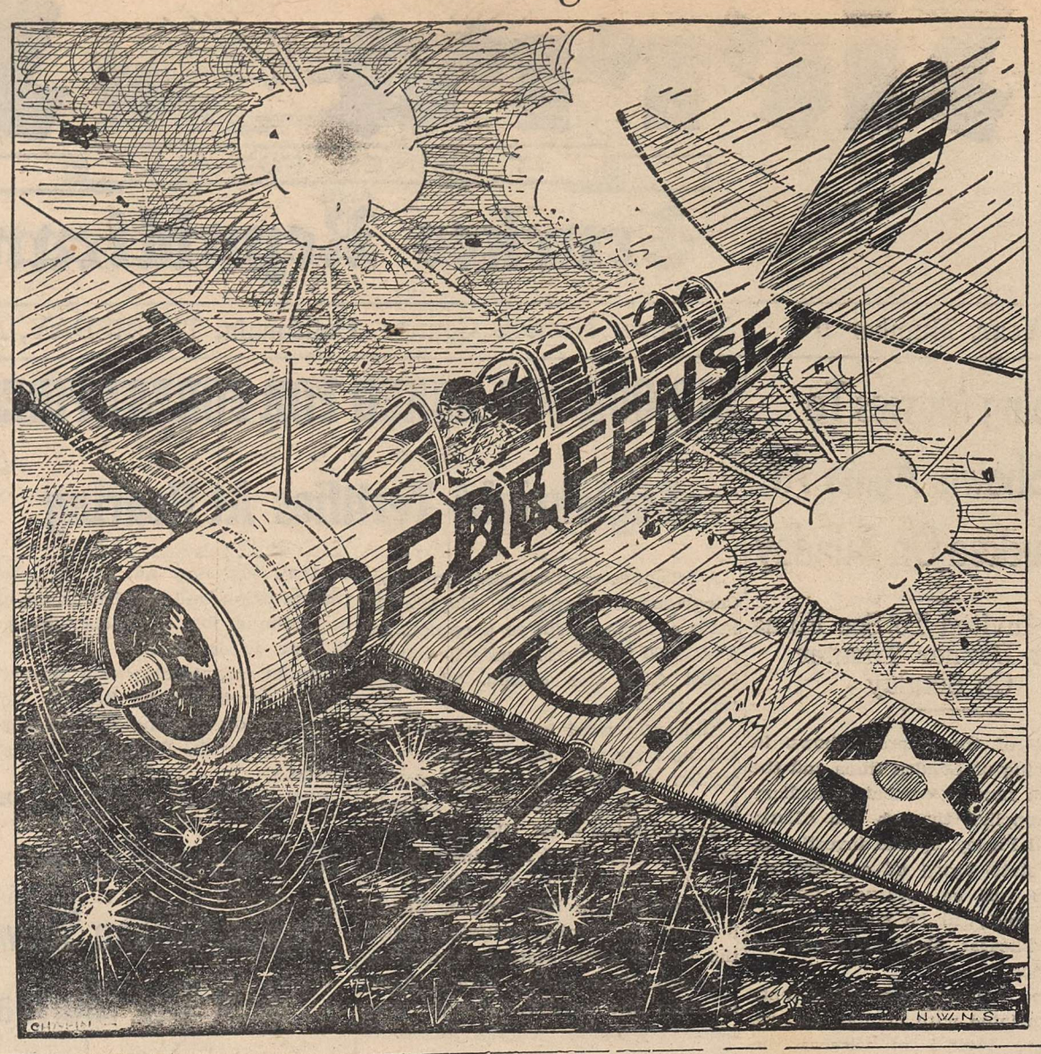
At Last the Eagle Strikes



AID FOR RATION BOARDS IS ASKED

SACRAMENTO, April 9—Kenneth I. Fulton, acting executive director of the California State Council of Defene, today sent out a call for volunteer clerical workers for duty with rationing boards in their respective communities.

Fulton asked county and city defense council officials to assist in the drive for volunteer help, pointing out that until such time as provision is made to engage salaried workers, the present staffs are inadequate to cope with the mounting volume of work.

EDITORIAL

A WORD TO THE WISE

To buy or not to buy, that is not the question. The public has already answered it with a buying boom that has the experts seriously worried.

In January, grocery sales soared 25 per cent above these of the preceding year. Showing little halt to the trend, department store sales in the first weeks of March ran 24 per cent over the preceding March. Now when retailers become alarmed over booming sales, it's news of the first order.

Why are they so concered? Because they suspect too much of it is due to hoarding. Because they regard themselves as vested wtth a genuine responsibility to the public. Panicky buying makes it difficult, and sometimes impossible, to discharge that responsibility. It brings on shortages, sends prices skyrocketing, hastens government rationing, and disorganizes the orderly distribution of goods. For the most part, retailers are well stocked with protective inventories, but a foolish rumor can start a buying wave that will knock the botttom out from otherwise adequate supplies.

Even should we have to forego certain materials for a time, let's remember one thing. The American ingenuity which discovered rayon and nylon, which developed large scale distribution systems reaching every town and hamlet, still flourishes. Given a fair chance, it will continue to find substitutes and to keep plentiful supply lines open to the public.

For America's sake and your own, let it be given that chance.

NO-STRIKE LAW WANTED

If popular opinion still counts in this country, we have probably about seen the end of strikes in war production industries.

Dr. George Gallup, who has become famous for his accurate measuring of public opinion, reports that today 86 per cent of the people of all classes favor legislation forbidding strikes in war industries for the duration and that such a law is even favored by 81 per cent of the workers themselves.

Congressmen will want to check up yith opinion in their districts, but this overwhelming figure of Dr. Gallup's wuld indnicate an order by the people of the United States tha such legislation be enacted.

Many congressmen from industrial districts realize that difficulties between employees and employers are not always the fault of the union men. There have been a good many cases where the employer is to blame and where the workers are jusstified in demanding better conditions.

But no matter who is to blame in the labor dispute, the attitude of the people today is that a strike should not be used as a tool for remedying the situation—that the only one who gaines from any strike today is Hitler.

Labor in this country knows that our Governfent is bending over backwards to see that it gets fair treatment. Even with the strike weapon rules out, the working men, upon whom the nation depends for arms, can be assured that any serious difficulties which they will face will be taken care of.

The American people want the laboring man to be satisfied with his lot but they no longer want any men in the laboring force, or in the labor unions, who refuse to put the future of their country before immediate selfish gains.

Northern Californians paid more than twice as much income this year as last—$72,857,535 as against 1941 for $30,941,723.

Questionnaires To Be Sent Registrants in Recent Army Draft

SACRAMENTO, April 9— Announcing the distribution of Occupational Questionnaires to California me who registered February 14-15-16, Brig. General Joseph O. Donovan, state director of selective service, urged that they give careful thought to their skills, experience and aptitudes when filling out these forms, so that the best possible use of their services may be made in the Nation's war effort.

The questionnaire, which is being distributed to February registrants by their local boards, later will be sent to registrants of the First and Second Registrations and those of future registrations, General Donovan said. Its purpose is an inventory of the present employment activities of registrants and of their skills or abilities. It has no connection with and is not to be confused with the regular Selective Service Questionnaire which is sent to all registrants to obtain data on which Selective Service classification is based General Donovan emphasized.

The data obtained through the Occupational Questinnaire, the director said, will be forwarded through State Headquarters to the National Roster of Scientific and Specialized Personnel and to the United States Employment Service. It will be used by these federal agencies, respectively to locate persons with certain professional and scientific qualifications and those who have skills or aptitudes in critical or esential occupations for the ultimate purpose of achieving a more complete and efficient utilizations of the nation's manpower in the war production program.

MY PLACE IN THE SUN

by DOUG BARKETT

A correspondent for a national magazine recently wrote that in northern Maine they have just three seasons of the year, "July, August and Winter." Any resident of Truckee might easily add, "Amen!" to that. The only way we can tell that spring is sprung hereabouts is to look at the callender or at the seed packets in the grocery stores. Censorship both of language and the weather reports prohibits comment on it by me, but, dear readers, I assure you that we are certainly having plenty of winter.

With the Knight of Pythian Roll Call coming up next month, I am reminded that four Knights have donned the shining armor and are in the service of their Uncle Sam and probably won't be present to answer roll, having more important business at hand. In fact the No. 1 man in the lodge, Chancellor Commander Hes Cardinal, is in the navy and inner guard Erving Waters is in the army. The other two Knights, too, are split between navy (Addison Nelson) and army (Carl Kielhofer)....The Eagles Aerie here is also represented by Charles Pierce the younger, in the army.

STREET SEENS: Dr. A. A. Cozzalio in townvisiting friends all the way from Reno (and using rubber tires, too)....Deppity Dolley esscorting a cliennt to the Bastile Saturday aft ....Billy and Mother Preston arm-in-arm down the bullyvard....a bunch of the CPT boys heaving snowballs at one another and at various passerbys....Mrs. Cecil Edmunds inspecting the Red Cross display in the Sierra Sun window....along with lots of other folks....Dean Mowry looking like a working man....the usual weekend crop of newlyweds on the Greyhound busses.

One local wit states that he hears a lot of fellows are getting married to evade army service and has reached the conclusion that "War may be bad—but not that bad!" Whether you agree or not, it is something to think about.

TEAM WORK

Anyone who plays games knows what happens to the side which doesn't "pull together." From bridge to baseball—it's all the same. Heckle your bridge partner and he plays worse than even he knows how. Nag your golf partner and he slices into the rough. You can't win a game of baseball or football with a team of "Sour Pusses" who hate each other and just won't cooperate.

Well—we are now trying to win a much bigger game than any of these and it is going to be very difficult to do unless we use TEAM WORK. When it is all over we can tell our team-mates what we think of their bad sportsmanship and general all-around inefficiency. We can "bawl out" our bridge partner or be "bawled out" by him. We can tell the captain how much more easily we would have won the game than he did. But while the game is in play, we will enjoy far better success if we abuse and denounce and scold the opposing team only. If our captain gives an order which may seem foolish; or if he is following a policy of which we don't approve—we on the sidelines must remember that he has a plan of campaign in his mind which is based upon inside knowledge of the opponents stategy and of his team's capabilities; a knowledge which we do not possess. We made his captain to co-ordinate our efforts and to lead us to victory. He can only accomplish that objective if we back him unstintingly while the game is in play. The opponents know this and will move heaven and earth to disrupt our team-work while they maintain their own.

This doesn't mean that constructive criticism should cease; such criticism is an essential to good management. It means that we should no longer indulge ourselves in acrid tirades based, for the most part, upon rumors or upon lack of information—the type of vituperation which keeps everyone in a ferment and prevents national cooperation: the type which emanates from fear, from braggadocio, and from mouths which work faster than theirs' brains.

We must be patriots if we are going to win this war; and if we are too old to fight, or too poor to buy bonds, or too occupied ot give all our time to some active war work—we can at least help by foregoing destructive abuse and by showing our disapproval of other who indulge in it.

The Germans lost the first war when their team work began to crumble. The French started the second war with no team work and with no team work were easily beaten. The German team work so far—is superb; and so is Japan's. We have got it to match "or else." At present we are certainly not doing so! Every patriot should constitute himself a guardian of his own tongue and a censor of his friends' tongues. When we have team work we will have the "makings" for victory.

TWO CAN SING

by JAMES M. CAIN

W-N-U- RELEASE

CHAPTER 12

There came a knock on the door, and a little Italian in a derby hat came in and stood beside me where I was at the table and began to talk about how some of my admirers wanted to hear me sing, but their tickets would cost them a lot, and more stuff like that, and I didn't know what he was talking about, except it seemed to be some kind of touch. Horn was behind him. He nodded and held up ten fingers. I got my pocketbook, passed out $10 and the guy left. "What was that?"

"The claque."

"What's the claque?"

"A bunch of self-elected noise-makers, that you pay to clap when you sing, and whether they do or not nobody knows."

I went down, then walked over and had a look at the calls. Then my heart skipped a beat. On the first two calls at the end of the second act, we were all in it—me, Parma the Gilda, and the people in the small parts. Then on the next two it was just Gilad and me. And then it said: Mr Borland (If)

I walked out on the stage to get the feel of the set, and the tingle was clear down to my feet. I made up my mind there wasn't going to be any if about it. I was going to get that call or split my throat.

Parma was right in the "Questa o Quella", so Act 1 got off to a swell start, and they ripped right along with it. I got a hand when I came on, but I don't think it could have been all claque. There had been a lot of stuff in the papers about me. I was singing under my own name now, and it seemed to strike them as a good story that a big contractor should turn into a singer, but any way it made me feel good, and I hit it right in the scene with the second baritone, and we got a fine curtain. Hippodrome opera isn't like Metropolitan opera. It's 99-cent opera, and that audience acts the way it feels. The second scene of the act went even better. The bass was a pretty good comic, and I fed to him all I could, so we got away with the duet in swell shape. The Gilda was all right in the "Caro Nome," not like Cecil, but plenty good. The duets went well, and we got another good curtain, and were on our way.

When it came to the scene before the courtiers, the one I had rehearsed with the choristers, I did it a little different from what I had been doing it. I got a break at the start. The Ceprano had one of these small throaty baritones, and when it came to the place where I was to mock him on "Ch' hai di nuovo, buffon," I shot it back to him just the way he had given it to me, and it got a big laugh, I had them then.

I chucked the tone quality out the window then. The first part of the scene I shouted, talked and whispered, till I got to the place where they slammed me back on my hunkers. Then I remembered "Boheme." I came crawling back, and plucked the hem of Marullo's doublet, and gave them tears. I sang it "dolce" and then some. I opened every spigot there was, and at the end of it I was flat on the floor, hanging on to the high F like my heart would break, and finishing off like I could just barely make myself do it.

There wasn't any pause then. The first "bravo" came like a pistol shot before I even got through, and then the came from all over the house and the applause in a swelling roar. I lay there, the heart bowed down for a long time. It's an enormous house, the Hippodrome, and it takes them longer to quiet own than any other place on earth. The Gilda came running on, then, and we did the duet, and the curtain came down.

Did I get that call? I'm telling you I did!

I went to my dressing-room, walked around, and was so excited I couldn't even sit down. I wanted to go out there and do it all over again. It didn't seem two minutes before they called me and I went down for the last act.

The Gilda and I did the stuff that starts it, and then went off, and Parma had it to himself for the "La Donna e Mobile." I think I've given you the idea by now that that dumb Italian is a pretty good tenor. He knocked them over with it, and by the time the Maddalena came on, and the Gilda and I went out again for the quartet, we were in the home stretch of one of those performances you read about. So the quartet started.

Well, you've heard the "Rigoletto" quartet a thousand times, but don't let anybody tell you it's a pushover. The first part goes a mile a minute the second part slower than hell, and if there's one thing harder to sing than a fast allegro, it's a slow andante and three times out of five something happens, and many times as you've heard it you haven't often heard it right. But we were right.

Parma started it like a breeze and the Maddalena was right on top of him, and the Gilda and I were right on top of her, and we closed out the allegro with all four cylinders clicking and the show doing seventy. Parma laid it down nice on the andante, and we were right with him, and we brought it home just right. We were right on the end of the stick. Well, that stopped the show,too. They clapped, and cheered, and clapped some more, and Schultz threw the stick on me to go on, and a fat chance I could. We had to give them some more. So after about a minute, Schultz played the cue for the andante, and Parma started again.

He started, and the Maddalena came in, and the Gilda and I came in. It seemed to me we got in there with it awful quick, but I was so excited by that time I hardly knew where I was, and I didn't pay much attention to it. And then all of a sudden I had this awful feeling that something was wrong.

I want you to get it straight now, what happened. The andante is the same old tune, "Bella figlia dell' amore," that you've heard all your life and could whistle in your sleep. The tenor sings it through once, then he goes up to a high B flat, holds it, comes down again. The second time he sings it, the contralto comes in then the saprano, then the baritone and they're off into the real quartet Well, our contralto, the Maddalena was an old-time operatic hack that had sung it a thousand times. but something got into her, and instead of waiting for Parma to finish that strain once, she came ni like she would on the repeat. And she pulled the Gilda in. And the Gilda pulled me in.

You remember what I told you about speed? Up there you've got no time to think. Yo uhear your cue and you come in, and heaven help you if you miss the boat So there was Parma and there was the orchestra in one place ni the score and there were the Maddalena, the Gilda, and me in another place in the score, and there was Schultz, trying like a wild man to straighten it out. Not a whisper from the audience you understand. So long as you keep going and do your best they'll give you a break—so long as you do your best. They all want to laugh but they won't—so long as you keep your head down and sock.

But I didn't know then what was wrong. All I knew was that it was getting sourer by the second, and I started looking around for help. That was all they needed—that one little flash of the white feather—and they out a roar.

You can think of a lot of things in one beat of music. It flashed through my head and I had heard the bird at last. It flashed through my head, in some dumb sort of way, why I had heard it. I turned around and faced them. I mush have looked sore. They raored again.

That whole big theater then was spinning around for me then like a cage with a squirrel init, and me the squirrel. I had to know where I was at. I looked over, and tried to see Parma. And then brother, and then once again, I committed the cardinal sin of all grand opera. I forgot to watch the conductor. I didn't know that he had killed his orchestra, killed his sgniers, brought the whole thing to a stop, and was wig-wagging Parma to start it over. And here I came, bellowing out with my part:

"Taci, e mia sara la cura, La vendetta d'affrettar!"

They howled. They let out a shriek you could hear in Harlem. Someone yelled "Bravo!" A hunndred yelled "Bravo!" A million yelled "Bravo!" hell.

I ran....

Next thing I knew I was by a stairway, holding on to the iron railing, almost twisting it out by the roots trying to keep myself from flying into a million pieces. The Gilda was beside me, yelling at me at the top of her lungs, and don't think a coloratura soprano can't put on a nice job of plain and fancy cussing when she gets sore. The stagehands were standing around, looking at me as though I was some leper that they didn't dare touch. Outside Schultz was playing the introduction to the stuff between the contralto and the bass. He had had to skip five whole pages. I just stood there twisting at those iron bars.

Somewhere off, I heard the fire door slam, and next thing I knew, Cecil was there, her eyes big as saucers with horror. She grabbed hold of me.

"You go out there and finish this show, or I'll—"

"I can't!"

"You've got to! You've simply got to. You went yellow! You went yellow out there, and you've got to go back and lick them! You've got to!"

"Let me alone!"

"But what are they going to do? You can't let them down like this!"

"I don't care what they do!"

"Leonard, listen to me. They're out there. They're out there—she, and your two kids—and you've got to finish it. You've just got to do it!"

"I won't! I'll never go out there—"

They were playing my cue. She took hold of me, tried to pull me away from the stairs, tried to throw me on the stage by main force. I hung on. I hunk on to that iron like it was a life raft. The bass started singing my part. She looked at me and bit her lip. I saw two tears start out of her eyes and run down her face. She turned around and left me.

I got to my dressing room, locked the door then I cracked. No iron bars there to hold on to. I clenched my teeth, my fists, my toes, and it did no good. Here they came, those awful hysterical sobs I had heard coming out of Doris that day, and the more I fought them back, the worse they got. I knew the truth then knew why Cecil had laughed at me that night in Rochester, why Horn had been so doubtful about me, and all the rest of it. I was no trouper and they knew it. I had smoke and nothing else. But you can't lick that racket with smoke. You've got to care about it; you can't get by on a little voice and a little music. You've got to dig up the heart to take it when it's tough, and the only way you can find the heart is to love it. I was just another Doris. I had every thing but what it takes.

High, Low Places in California

The Man at the Keyhole

by OPERATIVE WB

Governor Olson, our spy advises, is lietrally turning political handsprings in a belated attempt to avoid a show-down battle on the bill outlawing secondary boycotts, which will go to the referendum vote of the people in November. At the time he denounced the bill (only to have the Legislature pass it over his veto), the Governor thought he had a sure-fire issue to insure his re-election; he even said as much. BUT THAT WAS BEFORE PEARL HARBOR. Today the issue is "hot"—hotter than "hot cargo."

A new political party may soon make its bow to California voters. The new organization, known as the Constitution Party, must secure 30,000 voters, now without party affiliations, to win a place on the ballot. All of the signatures, to be valid must come from a comparatively small group (150,000) now registered in the "decline to state" column.

How in the heck is a recruiting sergeant going to get enlistments for the new Women's Auxiliary Army Corps when the uniforms (pardon us while we blush) make no provision for such feminine necessities as girdles, panties and bras? That's the question which has everybody in the army stumped, from corporals to generals. And something has to be done about it. The ladies aren't agraid of cannon or machine guns But long underwear? Now that's something no self respecting soldierette would be caught dead in, not even for Uncle Sam!

PRIORITIES OFFICE TO BE AT CAPITAL

The Priorities Division of the War Production Board will establish a Sacramento branch in the Production Division office, 409 Farmers and Mechanics Building, 1014 Eighth St. during the week of April 20. The northern Calfirnia area will be served by John S. Moffat, a trainee specialist in priority procedure, according to O. McCraney, district manager.

This Sergeant Acts Dual Role With Carrier Pigeons and Bayonets

A worker of miracles is Master Sergeant Max Bronkhorst. At Fort Sam Houston, Texas, he is engaged in the dual capacity of training homing pigeons for the Signal Corps and in teaching New York clerks, Pennsylvania steel workers and young farmers from half a dozen states in the dexterous use of the bayonet.

He has been breeding carrier pigeons since his boyhood in Rotterdam, Holland, nearly half a century ago. He brought a basketful of his Dutch birds to America long before the first World War and with him they entered the United States Army. Both made good. Nearly everybody knows how pigeons are used in modern warfare for auxiliary communications and for pilots of airplanes whose radios go wrong. Parachute troops and military intelligence agents also need the courageous feathered messengers.

Very few are downed by gunfire, the sergeant says, but a good many are killed by hawks and cats. He declares that with the best of food and care a pigeon will serve the Army and the nation for as long as 10 years.

Bronkhorst is equally enthusiastic in his work as an instructor in bayonet practice. He acquired his skill with the steel weapon while serving in the Dutch army and majored in its use in the A. E. F. He is especially proud of his bayoneteers in the squads at Fort Sam Houston.

Sergt. Max Bronkhorst

I have never seen anything like them, he says. These men are just superior, and that's all there is to it. I've seen bayonet fighters of all races but none will be able to stand up against these American boys.

Soldiers from the farms, adept in handling the pitchfork, are handy with the bayonet but he singles out the Pennsylvanians for the highest praise.

"Especially these Polish boys from the steel mills," the sergeant grins. "The Poles have a perpetual resentment of the wrongs suffered by their native land. They can come to grips."

REV. ROBERT H. HARPER

The Mission of the Seventy.
Lesson for April 12: Luke 10: 1-7, 17, 21-24.
Golden Text: Luke 10: 2.

It is significant that early in his ministry Jesus sent out 70 disciples to prepare the way for him in places where he should go. This was a provision for an organized campaign to reach into yet other regions of need.

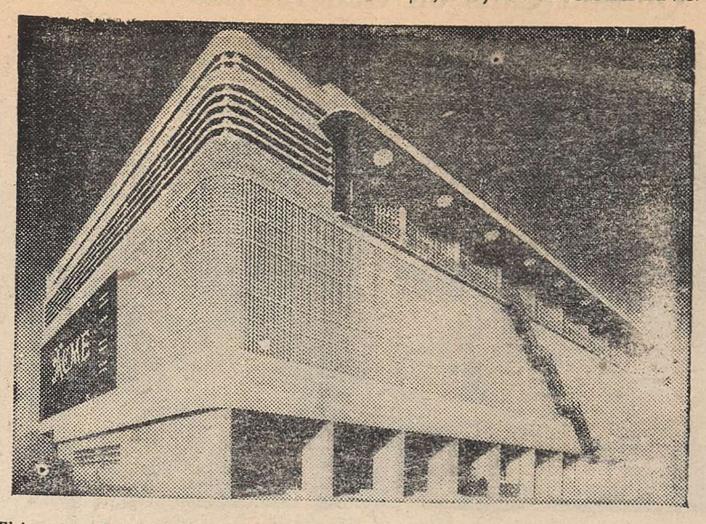
Like some armies, but in a right way, these messengers were to "live on the country," depending entirely upon the generosity of the people among whom they were sent. "The laborer is worthy of his hire." Their work was urgent and they were not to waste time in needless things. Their efforts were successful. "They returned with joy saying, Lord, even the demons are subject unto us in they name."

We read that Jesus rejoiced and thanked God that the great things of life, which wise men had failed to gain, had been revealed unto babes. It is a blessed thing that God's revelation is not limited by imperfection of men. All can receive the good tidings of God's love and be blessed.

Jesus further rejoiced that all things had been delivered unto him of his Father and that the triumph of righteousness could be foreseen. Then turning to the desciples he declared that they were blessed in the things they were permitted to see and hear.

Let us realize how greatly we are blessed today and consecrate ourselves anew to the work of preparing the way for Jesus in this tragic generation, that we may share in the blessings of the disciples. "The harvest truly is plentiful, but the laborers are few;" let us pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers —including ourselves.

ACME BREWERIES' NEW $1,000,000 BUILDING



"This new building symbolizes our faith in the future of the west," said Karl F. Schuster, president of Acme Breweries, last Friday when his company opened a new million-dollar bottling addition to its block-square San Francisco brewery. A gleaming glass steel and concrete structure, the new building gives Acme over 200,000 square feet of much-needed floor space, and provides adequate bottling storage and shipping facilities to take care of peak season demands, "not only for this year but for many years to come," Schuster stated.

The opening of the new building was celebrated by a sales and advertising convention attended by several hundred Acme salesmen and distributors from the 11 western states and Alasaka.

Addressing the gathering, Schuster enumerated the factors which have been responsible for Acme's sensational growth since repeal.

"First, we have a good product," said Schuster, "a light dry beer that we felt sure the public would enjoy. We backed our faith in this product with aggressive selling and dramatic advertising. Each year, as our sales have increases, our advertising appropriation has increased. This year we are backing up our salesmen and distributors with the largest advertising campaign in our history."

Acme's distributor in this district is the Coca-Cola Bottling Company of Truckee.

GOVERNOR CALLS STATE DEFENSE MEET APRIL 15-17

SACRAMENTO, April 9— A three-day meeting of the State Council of Defense was called today by Governor Culbert L. Olson, chairman, for April 15, 16 and 17 in Los Angeles to consider a "series of vital problems affecting civilian defense activity."

The initial session will be devoted to mettings of the 10 major committees of the council, with reports and recommendations to acted upon during the second and third day.

In addition, the council will also consider the problems of representatives of the city and county defense councils.

NATIONAL FORESTS TO BE KEPT OPEN UNDER CONTROL

SACRAMENTO, April. 9, (UP)-- Regional Forester S. B. Snow of the U. S. Forest Service announced today that national forests of the California region (California and southwestern Nevada) will remain open this summer to public use, insofar as fire preention and military needs permit.

Snow poinnted out that California faces a serious fire season this year "which may become double hazardous under war conditions." He said qualified fire fighters will be scarce because so many have gone into the defense industries and farm work.

"Forest and brush fires, however they may be caused, can easily disrupt or interupt military and war industry programs or bring civilian disaster," he said.

"Certain restrictions limiting the public use of all national forests will therefore be necessary," Snow said. "The forest service has a grave responsibility to protect normal and war time public interests in national forest resources and the lifelines of industry and communication running through these forests."

He outlined the following restrictions, effective June 1:

Main state and county roads in the Angeles,Cleveland, Los Padres and San Bernardino national forests of southern California will remain open to travel throughout the fire season, but forest truck trails and foot trails in hazardous areas will be closed.

Practically all popular summer home colonies and fire proofed picnic and campgrounds in the southern forests will be open as will high-country areas of low fire hazard. Isolated campgrounds will be closed.

In northern California, the Sequoia, Sierra, Inyo, Stanislaus, Eldorado, Mono, Tahoe, Plumas, Lassen, Modoc, Shasta, Klamath, Trinity and Mendocino National Forests will remain open except for federal forest areas where lumber companies are operating and inaccessible regions of strategic watersheds and high-value timber or grazing lands, whwere fire hazards are severe.

Limited areas in national forests will be closed for military reasons and abnormal or severe fire conditions might necessitate additional closures in hazardous regions.

Closure boundries will be clearly marked and except those made for military reasons, will be removed as soon as the fire season ends.

Politically Speaking

By JOHN W. DUNLAP
United Press Staff Correspondent

SACRAMENTO, April. 9, (UP)— Attorney General Earl Warren is about ready to announce his decision whether to run for governor—and it would not be surprising if he makes the race.

Warren has a difficult problem to decide. He would be a cinch for re-election as attorney general, a post fitted to his legal training which pays more salary than governor.

Yet he is without doubt the leading Republican contender in the gubernatorial race and probably the one man in the state with sufficient following to give Governor Olson a close race. Warren is a Republican but would cut heavily into Democratic ranks because of his conservative policies, as contrasted to the more liberal program of the governor.

Certain of Warren's friends sense that he is so displeased with the administration of Governor Olson, particularly on matter of civilian defense and matters affecting the attorney general's office, that he will risk a sure job on the gamble of the governor's chair. Warren probably has ambitions of being United States senator some day, and a setback for governor would hinder his national aspirations. But Warren will look before he leaps since the stakes are so high.

There has been tremendous pressure on him to run for a long time. It is only natural that opponents of the Olson administration would flock to whomever had the best chance to win. So far, Wallace Were, Los Angeles attorney and former president of the railroad commission, is the only announced candidate for the Republican nomination and he is not as well known throughout the state as is Warren.

Another possibility is Justus Craemer, Orange newspaper publisher and incumbent president of the railroad commission. An experienced politician Creamer would secure strong press support and conduct a rip-roaring campaign, but again, his name is not so well known to the rank and file of voters as Warren.

There are others too—Roger Jessup, the Los Angeles supervisor, U. S. Webb, the former attorney general and some lesser known aspirants, but few if any will make the race if Warren is in there battling.

Warren has never lost a campaign for public office. He has a long record of public service, beginning in 1919 as a clerk of the judiciary committee of the legislature and then successively as a deputy city attorney of Oakland, 1919-20; deputy district attorney of Alameda County, 1920-23; chief deputy district attorney of Alameda County, 1923-25; district attorney, 1925-38 and then his present term as attorney general.

He enlised in the army in 1917, was commissioned a first lieutenant and later served as a captain in the officers reserve corps until 1936. Before the war, he graduated from the Bakersfield public schools, the University of California, and practiced law.

Warren is a vigorous man of 51, a commanding figure and an excellent speaker. And time after time he has shown no hesitation in speaking his convictions, such as his filing of charges a few days ago against Robert Noble and Ellis Jones, the isolationist leaders in Los Angeles, whom he characterized as "blasphemous loudspeakers for a group of Nazi sympathizers who are building an active fifth column in the state."

Warren has been a leader in preparing the state against sabotage and attack through his organization of peace officers and district attorneys. He pushed the anti-sabotage act through the last legislature.

From the standpoint of party politics, he is a powerful man in the Republican party having served as state central committee chairman in 1934-36 and national committeeman from California from 1936-38. He is probably the one Republican upon whom most of the factions within the party could solidly back.

Warren drew a heavy Democratic vote in his campaign for attorney general and obviously would have to cut deeply into the top-heavy Democratic registration to win the gubernatorial battle.

As elections go, this is a poor one to try for a new job. The general public isn't very hopped up over state politics as yet because of the war situation, income taxes and the other distractions. But when the slates of both parties get lined up and the electioneering begins, perhaps 1942 will equal past years for excitment.
